

How can refinancing be risky?

With the wrong loan, you could end up with house payments you can't afford. And, you could lose all of the equity in your home. This is happening to many people—good, smart, and trusting people. It shouldn't. Buying a home or refinancing your home loan can be complicated. But it can be explained in a way that you understand. Even if you have credit problems, you need to explore your options.

Don't borrow trouble.

When can debt consolidation be dangerous?

Often financial troubles lead people to debt consolidation as an easy solution. But, this can lead to greater debt. Sometimes it makes sense to consolidate your loans. However, when you tie it to the equity in your home, it may lead to a loan you really can't afford. If you can't make your new payment, you could lose your home. The decision to consolidate your debt should be made carefully with the best information available.

We can help you weigh all your options.

How could someone take your home?

If you have filed for bankruptcy or are behind in your house payments, you may be targeted by people who want to steal your home and your equity. They will offer to “help” you by buying your home and selling it back to you. They are only helping themselves—to your money and your home. Don't fall for their scams.

What are the warning signs of a risky loan?

There are some lenders that will put greed before your needs. They may charge you much higher fees than normal or a higher interest rate than your credit deserves. They may even charge fees they don't tell you about or for services you don't receive. Some lenders will rush you and not explain the details of the loan, even when you ask questions. Good lenders will treat you and your credit with respect. We can provide the information you need to make a good choice.
